News | Cervical Cancer Awareness Month

This time last year I wasn't dreaming of finding new shoes or the latest hand bag under the tree, instead, I was hoping for one wish to come true and be Cancer free for Christmas.

I have decided to share my experience now in particular because once the festive cheer is over and the celebrations of welcoming 2016 have finally wound down, January will not only mark the beginning of an exciting new year ahead, it is also Cervical Cancer Awareness Month.

My story began in July 2014. I had begun to experience a unique set of symptoms which were very typical of Cervical Cancer. After a series of tests and investigation I was given the devastating news that I did indeed have Cancer of the Cervix, stage 1B1.

I was very lucky that mine was classed as early stage but serious enough to require treatment that would not only save me but change my life forever.

I was fortunate to avoid the agony of Chemo and Radio Therapy but the operation would affect my fertility, which I found devastating.

On 5th December 2014 I spent five and a half hours in surgery to remove most of my cervix and fourteen of my pelvic lymph nodes. On 18th December 2014 my wish came true and I received the call to confirm that my operation was a success, I was cancer free for Christmas!

I am now in remission and have check-ups every few months for 5 years to follow my surgery... so far so good!!

News | Cervical Cancer Awareness Month

I am grateful for what I see as my 'second chance' and have been heavily focused on raising awareness to Cervical Cancer in a bid to help others know the signs and take necessary preventative action to protect themselves and their families.

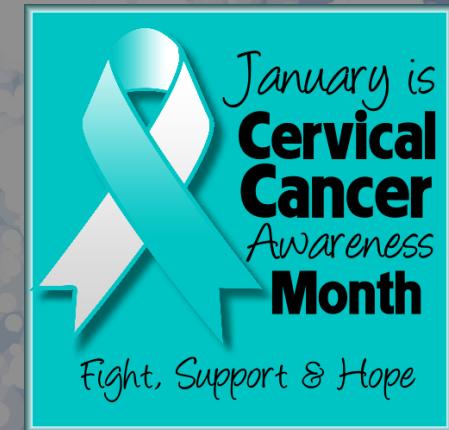

I appreciate that there are men reading so I have been careful not to go into too much detail about signs, symptoms, treatment and preventative measures (regular screening and vaccinations).

I have included the link to my Facebook page where you can access information to associated causes, signs and symptoms, cervical screening and vaccines to protect younger women. If you do wish to see my story in full detail I have made a video which is accessible on my Facebook page.

I would like to wish my fabulous training family a fantastic festive season. It has been amazing to have had the support from everyone, especially when I returned to the office in January, this year. My recovery has been, and continues to be, so much easier with the great people I have around me.
